TIGARD AWARDED $3 MILLION FOR WORK ON NEW POLICE AND PUBLIC WORKS FACILITY

The City of Tigard has been awarded $3 million dollars from the Oregon legislature for work on the city's new police and public works facility, with a focus on sustainable and resilient design for the Emergency Operations Center, which will be part of this critical new facility.

The capital construction award is part of House Bill 5006, which was approved by lawmakers at the end of June. The City will be using the funds to help pay for design of this project to allow for long-term savings in energy and maintenance costs.

"This is really exciting. The innovative and forward-thinking design will help us create a functional, efficient, and high performing space for our public safety and operations teams," said Tigard Mayor Heidi Lueb. "We want to make sure our new facility is designed effectively to meet the needs of our community now and well into the future."

"We are grateful for the leadership and support of our state officials, Sen. Courtney Neron Misslin, Rep. Ben Bowman and Rep. Sue Rieke Smith, who have been tremendous advocates for safety, resilience, and efficient operations in service to the Tigard community," added Deputy City Manager Emily Tritsch. "This investment will help us design a brighter future for Tigard."

The current police and public works facilities were built roughly 40 years ago, but Tigard's population has tripled since then. The current facilities are now outdated, undersized and unsafe. Challenges include security issues, leaks, costs for off-site storage and office space, impacts for recruitment and retention, seismic concerns and more.

If a bond vote is successful in May 2026, construction will begin on the undeveloped 9.5 acres the City of Tigard purchased for this project on SW Wall Street near Hunziker Road, and Tigard's first responders could be moving in by mid-late 2028. The average Tigard homeowner would pay $9-15 more per month, depending on the life of the bond.
